I am learning that careers in web development can be so varied in their tasks and job descriptions. Web developers need to be knowledgeable in many areas to be a good fit for the needs of different businesses. It gives you an edge if you have a lot of different skills to bring to the table. The national average of base salary in the United States is higher than I thought it would be for a web development type of job, but when I dug into specific jobs, a lot of them (if the salary was advertised) seemed to be offering a salary below the national average. Experience is a must in a lot of the jobs that I looked at. Having experience in the field will help to open opportunities for growth.

This class is teaching me that web design is fun, and the more you know, the better prepared you will be for a professional career. The more you practice your problem-solving skills, the better off you will be in the professional world of web design and development. This class gives a good introduction into what a career in web design and development would possibly look like, and it gives you a lot of opportunity to problem solve any issues that come up.
